ANNOUNCEMENTS

Hoyt's "A Hole in the Ground."
Hoyt's piece de resistance, "A Hole in the Ground," will be seen at the opera house next Friday evening.

The scenes in this bright and witty conceit are laid at White River, Va., an unpretentious station, where several diverging branch railroads are supposed to have connecting trains. It is keen and biting satire on such pretty railroad officials as the "I am I" station agents; the "own the world" baggage "smasher"; the tyrannical porter, the obstreperous conductor; and the at all times impudent lunch counter girls; and the "my busy day" telegraph operators.

Under the Red Robe.
"Under the Red Robe," after its unprecedented run of one season in New York City, will be brought here next week with its admirable company, costumes and novel stage effects. Mr. Paul Gilmore, the distinguished young actor, heads the company, which we are assured is one of the largest, strongest and most complete that ever left New York. This organization in this famous play will not be presented here again at any future time.

Medical Examination Before Marriage.

A marriage license bill has been introduced in the Wisconsin senate which promises to eclipse the marriage law of 1890. This bill provides that no person can marry who is suffering from true or hereditary insanity, insanity caused by vicious habits or the use of drugs, consumption and various other diseases which are named in the bill. Every person who wishes to marry is required to go before an examining board of three surgeons to be appointed in each county of the state by the county judge and must pass an examination before a marriage license can be issued. In addition to this, all male candidates for matrimony who are under 25 years of age and all female candidates under 18 years must produce a written consent of their parents before they can secure a license. Any clergyman, justice of the peace or other person who can perform marriages and who marries any couples who do not produce a certificate from the examining physicians of his county is to be fined not more than $500 or confined in prison not more than one year.

FROM ROSEBUD AGENCY

The Fairchild Squaw—Falls on an Indian Virtue—Table Manners of Poor Lot—Wooling—Curling a Nervous Indian—Visit of a Mysterious Death Angel—The Story of the Sun Dance.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS:
ROSEBUD AGENCY, S. D., Feb. 16, 1901.
Last evening as the sun set behind these big, gray brown hills, painting the purple blue clouds with a fringe of gold, the last ray of sunshine seemed so linger in pity for the old and best form of an Indian woman putting up her lodge, up there where the sky comes down to meet the hill tops. How carefully she brushes away the snow, how skillfully she places the long slender poles and wraps the many yards of canvas around them, the while her lord and master sits idly by smoking his pipe and awaiting his meal.

Yet through all the hardships allotted her, you may hear the low soft notes of a song, as she labors on and when the lodge is completed and the smoke is spiraling heavenward and the cold winter wind is shut out, she finds rest, and well earned.
Patience is an art among the Indians, especially in love affairs or when there is a square meal forthcoming, and surely they would make good traders in a country where trains are always late. For hours they will sit around a person's house or camp awaiting an invitation to dine; should none be extended, they will then ask for a meal and if there be enough for three hungry men and a dog on the table it disappears for that customer is, eat everything you can and then pocket the rest.

I recall an incident that happened some time ago, an Indian came to a ranch upon White river for something to eat and that was the man stepped out for a few minutes and returning found his guest seated upon the table eating. When he had finished he poured what sugar was left in a handkerchief, wrapped up all the bread, bacon and potatoes and walked out. Tall as a tree and as the Indians and though that piece of furniture costs them nothing they prefer the floor or ground.
With all the forces that work for the benefit of the Indian, all the time spent in their behalf, one would be surprised to see them in their homes and how void of manners. Again of their patience, when a brave has found a lady that suits his fancy, whether he is to her liking or not, he makes love to her. Dressed in his finest and mounted on his best horse goes to her lodge, and when the day is done and the shadows lengthen and the night settles down, his love is told in the songs he sings to her. When next his brave lover comes, he ties his horse near the maiden's lodge and if accepted she waters and feeds the animal, and if not, turns him loose and he will be found some distance off. Sometimes horse and rider go without food or drink for several days, if the lady's mind is slow to act, thus bringing a pressure on the patience which never tires. If said lady has refused the love offered and he finds his heart's heart cannot survive without her, that heart becomes bad and a case of kidnapping takes place, then all objections are blotted out on her part and a life of happiness ever after is hers.

For some time past George Knook-Off, Two, an educated full blood, has so feared the thunder and lightning that at the sight of a cloud he would hide until that cloud disappeared. The medicine men held a council and on a night when the storm king reigned supreme, and the heavens split with vivid lightning, thunder booming with deafening notes, and now and then the patter of rain on the council lodge, a remedy for Geo. was found to dispel that fear. Twenty beet tongues were to be removed with the naked hand from a kettle of boiling water, so said the wise men, and then all would be well. The ceremony took place last May on Two-Strikes camp, about eight miles west of the agency in the presence of many Indians, and George performed it, "tis said, without a burn to his hand. The lightning may flash and the thunder roll on its noisy anger, but Knook-Off Two fears it no more. This man, well educated, believed he was doing a wonderful thing when he removed those tongues from the boiling water without burning himself, yet such an act could be done by a man of ordinary intelligence with his hands doctored with the right medicine. No matter how well learned an Indian may be, the old customs are still adhered to.

Last week Mr. No-Neck and Samuel Lost-Horse came down from Pine Ridge reservation, bearers of a wonderful tale. As it was told to me, I will tell it to you. One evening, as the quietness only found in the Hills country had settled down over the land, the evil spirits were stealing forth to exchange greetings, and the moon came peeping over the eastern hills, an angel came down from the land of the Great Spirit and winged its way to the lodge of an Indian who's grandfather had long since crossed the great divide into the land of the happy hunting grounds. The angel said that death would soon rid the earth of all people, and told the Indian his grandfather was well and had sent him this warning that he might prepare himself. Mr. Angel was arrested, handcuffed and chained to the cell, but ere the new day dawned he had taken flight to a land where respect would be shown. This angel, as the story goes, had wings on its back but was deformed in the foot, that member being like the hoof of a cow, and 'tis said this tale has worked up no little excitement among the Indians. Looking back to the outbreak of 1890-91 the reader will recall how such tales were in a great measure the cause of that war which ended in defeat for the Indian. Yet some of these people think they can whip the whites easily enough and would like to very much at times if they thought they dare.

The sun dance requires eight long hot days and nights in July when the moon is full to complete the ceremony attached to it. It is not danced in these late years, by request of the government, which has set July 4 for a celebration in aid of the dancers of the sun dance promise the Great Spirit to perform the ceremonies thereto if his blessings be theirs, and that his all-seeing eye watch over and guide them, that they may defeat the enemy in the coming battle, or that he will make a sick relative or friend well. During the dance the children's ears are pierced, the widows and orphans are given many horses and other useful things, and all that part of the tribe is at peace with the world. For the dancers a large lodge is erected, wherein they stay and fast for four days and nights; on the fifth day the medicine pole is cut and put in place. This pole is forked, with a bunch of wild cherry bushes tied at the junction; from top to bottom it is ornamented with the various of bead work; half way up a buffalo head is tied, and at the highest point a man and buffalo head of parched, meaning "Give me my day our daily meat and plenty ever more," flap to the wind. Also in the forks are fastened a possible bag, a sack of provisions and other charms. On the evening of the fifth day the dancers stand and smoke, and the last rites before the
