

Whites Wait For Fleeing Negroes in Race Riot

A posse of whites is shown here, shotguns in hand, waiting for cornered negroes. The burning shack was the scene of the first bloodshed in the race riots in Rosewood, Fla., in which two whites and six negroes were killed. Shooting broke out when whites tried to capture a negro who was suspected of aiding Jessie Hunter, negro, accused of assault on white girl, to escape. The whites, ready to shoot, are C. D. Hudson and C. C. Osten of Otter Creek, and A. Alford, grandfather of the victim of the alleged assault.

THEATRES

Good Show at the Crescent
Standing room only was in vogue last night at the Crescent theatre where five big acts of vaudeville are being presented and also a big feature photoplay and other screen attractions. The vaudeville at the Crescent today is exceptionally fine and those who saw the show last night and yesterday afternoon were loud in their praise of the performance. Many declared that it was an even finer performance than was seen at this popular variety theatre during the first three days of the week.

The photoplay being shown in connection with the usual five high class acts of vaudeville is "Shirley of the Circus," featuring Shirley Mason. This is a splendid photoplay of love and adventure and thrills with the smell of the sawdust ring and the canvass tops. It is one of those photoplays that one desires to see more than once.

Included in the photoplay is the fourteenth episode of "Queen of the Timberland," featuring Ruth Rowland. This is a wonderful chapter play that is the talk of theatregoers. A Harold Lloyd comedy and News complete the program.

At the Strand
Pat O'Malley who has the role of Conn, the shaghaun, in "My Wild Irish Rose," which will be shown at the Strand theatre today and tomorrow, nearly lost his breath in one of the scenes which depicts the hold of a convict ship.

In this scene he throws a blanket over his head to hide from the guard while he flees at the chains which bind Robert Ffolliott, the Fenian.

The blanket used for the scene had laid in the studio when some plastering was being removed and was filled with plaster dust. Conn threw the blanket over himself quickly and got his eyes, nostrils and mouth filled with flying particles of dust. He coughed and choked and spewed a hundred feet of film. A new blanket was substituted and the scene filmed.

"My Wild Irish Rose" is based upon Dion Boucicault's famous play, "The Shaghaun," and is filled with the atmosphere of old Erin. There are three love stories in the plot.

Lon Chaney at Dittmas

Lon Chaney is a marvelous actor. If he had never given evidence of that fact before his acting of the dual role in "A Blind Bargain" at the Dittmas theatre, would prove the statement conclusively. It requires, however, such a photoplay as "A Blind Bargain," to give Mr. Chaney an opportunity to score so decisively. This actor likes thrilling melodramatic situations in order to reveal his film mimetic gifts at their fullest development. These requirements are fully met in "A Blind Bargain" and the result is an hour and a half in the picture theatre brimful of thrills, the fascination of the horrible and the fantastic.

Nothing like "A Blind Bargain" has been seen here before. The story concerns the belief of a mad surgeon that he can prove the theory of evolution by turning man back into a physical and mental approximation of his simian ancestors by transferring the glands of a live monkey into his body.

A struggling author agrees to allow the doctor to experiment upon him in return for financial and medical aid for his mother who is dying for lack of proper care. Unable to buy his release from the doctor, after his book has been accepted, the writer escapes the horrible fate of other victims, chained in the doctor's private dungeon, only through the fact that one of these men, with superhuman strength, breaks the bars engaging him and crushes the doctor to death.

At the Majestic

How would you feel if you suddenly learned you had been sought as a fugitive from justice for thirty years for a crime you never committed?

That's just what happened to "Mr. Potter of Texas" in the great super picture that opens at the Majestic theatre today and tomorrow.

To prove his innocence, Mr. Potter nearly circled the globe, got into an Egyptian revolution, almost lost his daughter and was kidnapped himself.

All's well that ends well, but the thrills in Mr. Potter will linger long in your memory. Mr. Potter is not "just a picture," but an entertainment spectacle with a romantic narrative that will enthrall you.

Macklyn Arbuckle is ably supported by a cast of stars, and the picture will more than please the most discriminating theatre patron.

"Mr. Potter of Texas" sets a censor proof standard which the public demands.

Taken from Dion Boucicault's Famous Play, The Shaghaun

"Be at the ruins of St. Brigid's abbey at nine o'clock tonight," whispered Robert Ffolliott to Arte O'Neale, the girl he loved. She had visited him in prison and she knew by these words that he meant to break out of gaol that night. The thrilling escape and the pursuit come at the climax of the stirring action of "My Wild Irish Rose."
