WILSON EXPECTED TO USE PATRONAGE CLUB ON CONGRESS

Many Tempting Places Open To Win Support for Desired Legislation.

That Woodrow Wilson, as President, is not going to be above making use of the patronage club to drive sundry Senators and members of the House into line for his policies and for the legislation he wants, is the word borne in on Washington from certain of the close friends, confidants, and coadjutors of the President-elect.

Perusal of the public works of Mr. Wilson indicates a disposition on his part to believe it proper for the Chief Executive to wield the Executive authority vigorously. He does not apparently subscribe to the notion that the Executive should confine himself stringently to Executive duties and leave Congress to handle the legislative situation entirely. In other words, he interprets with liberality the advisory function of the President as regards Congress.

When Mr. Wilson became governor of New Jersey he held back certain choice appointments until he got legislation which he sought. Now taking it for granted there will be an extra session of Congress next spring, the new President will be in position, if he desires, to refrain from making a long list of appointments until the tariff has been revised and he has obtained the sort of tariff bills he wants put through.

Will Fill Many Vaconcies.

It is not the highest order of statesmanship, perhaps, to line up a Senator to vote for a given bill by dangling before his eyes an ambassadorship for a friend or an appointment as minister for some political lieutenant. But practically this method of getting votes rounded up has been pretty freely practiced in Washington. Sometimes the success of such methods has been striking. Every recent President has done that sort of thing, more or less.

It so falls out that Wilson will have more big appointments to make than any incoming Executive since McKinley in his first term. With all these offices at his disposal, and with a disposition to use them to get the legislation he wants, it is pretty clear that the new President is going to have a large hand in the carving of the tariff pie.

In the diplomatic service alone there will be a remarkable lot of new appointments to make. No less than ten ambassadorships are expected to be left vacant and no less than thirty-two ministerships. Each ambassador and minister will resign on March 4, as a matter of course, and there is no reason to doubt that sooner or later every Republican's place as the head of an embassy or legation will be taken by a Democrat. This would be in accordance with custom, and not in violation of the civil service requirements.

Numerous Appointments Can Drift.

These diplomatic appointments will provide some of the most important patronage offerings in the hands of the new President. It is not unlikely that judicious distribution of these appointments alone would serve to help the cause of some struggling tariff measure that did not have quite enough friends in House or Senate to put it through. But if to these appointments is added the immense amount of other patronage in all departments of the Government which the new Administration will have to bestow, perhaps with the organization of a new department, that of labor, added, it is not difficult to see that the incoming President will be in a position of tremendous power. Of course, some of the appointments, such as the Cabinet members, will have to be made at the outset of the Administration. But a large share of them can be permitted to drift along for some months after inauguration.

YOUNG BRIDE TRIES TO COMMIT SUICIDE

Mrs. Annie Brown Shoots Self Twice, But Is Now Recovering.

Mrs. Annie Brown, twenty-four years old, a bride of three months, is recovering today in the Emergency Hospital from two self-inflicted bullet wounds.

Discouraged over continued ill health, it is said, Mrs. Brown took a small .32-caliber revolver late yesterday afternoon and shot herself in the head and breast while in the hallway of her home, 1102 Maryland avenue southwest. Mrs. Brown's mother, who was in a room on the second floor at the time, ran downstairs when she heard the shots and caught her daughter in her arms as she was about to fall.

An ambulance was called and Mrs. Brown was taken to the hospital, where it was found neither wound was of a serious nature. At the hospital the woman made no statement except to say she had shot herself.

KIDDIES DELIGHTED WITH BIG MATINEE

Fourteen Hundred Orphans and Cripples Enjoy Party at Columbia Theater, at Which Candy, Ribbons, and Flowers Were Distributed.

It's a pretty fine world and a generous one, too. One needed only to look at the 1,400 happy little children who were guests at The Washington Times' party at the Columbia Theater to be sure of this fact.

It was the biggest, finest party that anyone could wish for, and its wonderful success is due mainly to the assistance of those who offered their aid to Miss Murdock and The Times in seeing that every little orphan and cripple child was taken to and from the theater in safety.

There wasn't a single casualty, with one exception. This was such a simple one that it is hardly worth mentioning. One little kid lost his or her hat. That's all. With the exception of this, everybody was happy, and nothing happened and if the little kid will send to Fred Berger, manager of the Columbia Theater, the hat will be returned in safety.

Was Biggest Ever.

I don't believe there ever was such a big theater party in Washington before. People said so, anyway. F street, from 12 o'clock until long after 6, yesterday afternoon, was the most popular thoroughfare in Washington. It was like a big inauguration day crowd. Everybody wanted to stop and watch the little youngsters go into the theater, and as automobile after automobile drove up to the entrance of the Columbia, deposited its burden of little people, and was whisked away to bring another load of happy smiling children, people stopped to watch.

Not many of them asked what it was all about, for they all knew what The Washington Times had done for the orphans and cripple children of Washington. They were might happy little joy riders, and their eyes stuck out like saucers as they entered the theater lobby and saw the pretty girls who had offered their services as ushers.

Many Offered Their Services.

It is impossible to give a list of the girls who helped to take the little ones to their seats, for the reason that many of them volunteered their services at the last minute. Each girl usher wore a gardenia which had been donated by William F. Gude, and each little child was presented with a pink carnation or a pink rose after the play was over, these flowers also being donated by Mr. Gude, who was a member of the executive committee of which Isaac Gans was the chairman. Director Carl Smith had arranged a special program of popular and familiar airs, which were played by the orchestra while the children were being seated.

The children were all nice and quiet after they had been placed in their seats, but when Director Smith's musicians played "The Star-Spangled Banner" every little pair of hands applauded vigorously, and the little folks rose to their feet until the final bar was played. They applauded again when the big American flag was displayed in the third act, showing that they are keenly alive to matters patriotic.

Kiddies Were Orderly.

It was the quietest, best behaved audience that has ever assembled in the theater. Manager Berger told me that yesterday, and Mr. Metzerott, the president of the Columbia Theater Company, and Mr. Fowler, the smiling box office man, backed up this statement. Chief Wagner was there, too, and he complimented the children on their very excellent manners, and the discipline that was apparent.

It seemed yesterday morning as though pretty nearly everybody in Washington who owned an automobile was anxious to place it at the service of the orphans and crippled children. Transportation could have been provided at the last minute for as many children as the theater could hold.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was never produced to a more appreciative and enthusiastic audience. When Rebecca, in the person of dainty Edith Tallaferro, made her appearance on the stage, in the old ramshackle stage coach, driven by Uncle Jeremiah Cobb, the little people got so excited and applauded so hard that it was several minutes before Miss Tallaferro could continue with her lines. They liked gossipy old Mrs. Perkins, played by Ada Deaves, too, and I think Miss Deaves entered into the spirit of the day a little herself. She seemed to put a number of extra frills into her dance in the barn, and made her laughable part a great deal funnier than on ordinary occasions.

The children went crazy over Uncle Jeremiah, especially when he ate his supper of hash and tea, with Rebecca seated opposite him, and they liked saucy little Minnie Smellie, and Clara Belle Simpson and Emma Jane Simpson with the curly hair, the little girls who were Rebecca's playmates. They weren't quite so strong for the crabbed old aunt, Mirandy Sawyer, but they were strong for the other aunt, Miss Jane Sawyer, who was so kind to Rebecca. As for Abner Simpson, they liked him from the very start, and especially after he had come out in front of the curtain and told them that there was candy and flowers waiting for them out in the lobby.

Some of them didn't quite understand the character of Mr. Aladdin until the last act, but when they knew that Rebecca was going to marry the fairy prince and "live happily ever afterward," just as it was in the story book, book.

Candies for the Kiddies.

But when the curtain had fallen on the last act there were other joyful surprises in store for the children. Out in the lobby a committee of girls, under Miss Selma Kahn, chairman, and several fraternity men passed out bags of candy to each little girl and boy, this [illegible] the donation of a number of well-known Washington firms, augmented by Mrs. Joseph Strasburger, who also donated 100 pounds of candy. Then Miss Isobel Elliott, with a group of helpers, handed a pink flower to each child as it passed, and if a ride in an automobile, a trip to the theater, candy, music, and flowers isn't enough, happiness to crowd into one day, I'd like to know.

Aside from these there were many automobile owners who drove to the theater after the performance to tender their services in taking the children to their homes. The thanks of the entire committee are due the drivers, who went without their dinners last evening, and the chauffeurs, who stuck to their wheels until after 7 o'clock.

Seated in the boxes were several members of the executive committee, which was composed of Isaac Gans, chairman, and Mrs. Gans, Messrs. and Mesdames James F. Oyster, John A. Johnston, Cuno H. Rudolph, W. V. Judson, A. Lisner, William F. Gude, F. A. Walker, Frederick Berger, Simon Kann, D. J. Kaufman, Charles Goldsmith, Frank Metzerott, and Mrs. Joseph Strasburger.

Donated Automobiles.

A partial list of those who donated their automobiles for the afternoon includes the names of The Brighton, Sidney E. Kent, Charles Semmes Motor Company, W. M. Burt, W. C. Long, Mrs. C. C. Marsh, Mrs. Joseph Strasburger, Sam Gassheimer, who gave one large sightseeing automobile, W. P. Barnhart, Irvin Rittenhouse, Mrs. L. T. Williams, Simon Kann, Mrs. Ross P. Transportation was also contributed by the Washington Railway and Electric Company, which placed at the service of The Times one of its largest type cars, which was used to convey the children from the Industrial Home School at Tenleytown to the theater and back to the home.

It was a grand, big success all around, and everybody was supremely happy.

Long Island, N. C.—"When my baby was about one week old his face broke out scaly first and then in little blisters or watery pimples which ran matter and then went into sores with scabs over them. The sores would run yellowish water. They itched and burned and he would scratch them and make them bleed. He could not sleep good and wanted to scratch his face all the time.

"We had him treated and used several kinds of salves and they failed. Then we got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and they took the desired effect. A little later we got one more box of Cuticura Ointment. He could sleep all right after we commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and he was entirely cured in six months." FIRST GUN FIRED IN FIGHT BETWEEN BIG LABOR BODIES

A. F. of L. and I. W. W. Trouble Is Seen in Resolution.

CONVENTION HALL, ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 14.—The opening gun in the fight which impends between the American Federation of Labor and the Industrial Workers of the World was fired at today's session. Delegate Paul Scharrenberg, of the San Francisco Labor Council introduced a resolution pledging the federation to a campaign of education among the unskilled laborers of the country.

"It is now generally recognized," said Scharrenberg's resolution, "that the millions of so-called migratory unskilled or common laborers of this country must be organized and brought within the protecting fold of the American Federation of Labor and whereas immeasurable assistance can be rendered in this work by the members of all organized skilled crafts if they will give every possible assistance and encouragement to these workers who have been falsely led to believe that the American Federation is mainly interested in the further advancement and uplifting of all the crafts already organized.

"Therefore be it resolved by the thirty-second annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, That we urge upon all affiliated unions to constantly impress upon the unorganized, unskilled workers that all workers are welcome under the banner of the American Federation of Labor."

The resolution also directed the executive committee of the federation to immediately take up the general organization of the unskilled workers.

It is expected that the resolution will be favorably reported by the committee on organization, and that it will be approved by the convention. This will bring the fight squarely to the doors of the industrial workers, as it is certain the federation will go after the unskilled workers in the steeel industry, where the Industrial Workers of the World is already very strong.

MacFarland Sent Up On Counterfeiting Charge

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Allison MacFarland, once convicted of wife murder and then acquitted in a second trial, today was sentenced by Judge Hough, of the Federal court, to a year and six months in the Atlanta penitentiary.

MacFarland pleaded guilty to a charge of counterfeiting. He admitted that his scheme was that of perfecting a method of duplicating silver ornaments by wholesale and at a low cost. He declared he used the 50-cent piece merely as a basis for experiment, and not with any idea of counterfeiting money.
